WERE MARRIED IN COLLEGE CHURCH

Miss Irene Granville and S. Frantz Lehman Married at Pretty Church Wedding on Wednesday Evening. Will Reside in Harrisburg.

A wedding of exceptional beauty occurred Wednesday evening at seven o'clock in the College Lutheran church when Miss Irene Granville, daughter of President Granville and Mrs. Granville and S. Frantz Lehman, of Harrisburg, were married, by Dr. J. A. Singmaster. The color scheme was blue and gold.

The groom and his best man, R. Bruce Albert, of Bloomsburg, entered the church by the west aisle and the remainder of the wedding party approached the altar by the eastern aisle. The six ushers, were followed by four bridesmaids, the maid of honor and the bride on the arm of her father.

The bride's gown was of white crepe de chine trimmed with Duchess lace and made with a long court train. Her veil was caught with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Rachel Granville, the maid of honor, wore a gown of gold taffeta and carried Marchal Niel roses. The bridesmaids were Miss Grace Keefe, of Springfield, Mass.; Miss Julia Boright of Chatham, N. Y.; Miss Louise Adams, of Providence, R. I.; and Miss Louise Duncan, of Gettysburg. They wore gowns of blue crepe de meteor with paniers of blue chiffon and with court trains. They carried armfuls of cosmos tied with gold chiffon ribbon.

The ushers were Oliver D. Mosser, of Chicago; Richard Z. McGowan, of Pittsburgh; Donald Ikeler, of Bloomsburg; Frederick Dapp, of Harrisburg; J. Perry King, of Kittanning; Frank Comfort, of Philadelphia. Mark K. Eckert played the Lohengrin march as the processional and the Mendelssohn march after the ceremony.

The church was decorated with Easter lilies and huge palms. A pink and green color scheme prevailed at the house and was carried out in roses and ferns. The decorations at the church and house were by Bester, of Hagerstown.

Proceeding the wedding a dinner was held at the White House for the wedding party and a few guests. At this time the gifts of the bride and the groom were presented. The bride gave to her maid of honor a little finger ring with diamond setting; and to her bridesmaids gold necklaces with carved jade pendants. The groom's gift to his best man was a ring with Phi Kappa Psi coat of arms and to his ushers monogram scarf pins.

Following the wedding a reception was held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Granville for a large number of guests. The college orchestra played. During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Lehman were taken by automobile to York from where they left this morning for Washington for a brief trip.

They will be at home in Harrisburg after October first.

Among the out of town guests were Charles Lehman, Miss Florence Lehman, Miss Una Lehman, Miss Jennie Hansen, Greensburg; Miss Martha Boyer, Chicago; Ralph Reed, New Haven, Conn.

A large number of very handsome presents in silver, cut glass, china, linen and in money were received by the bride.

SHOWED RAZOR, LANDED IN JAIL

Alexander Waters Gets into Trouble for Showing Weapon in Front of Wizard Theatre. Given Hearing by Squire Harnish.

Alexander Waters, of Lancaster, a waiter at the Globe Hotel, was the cause of a rumpus in front of the Wizard Theatre Wednesday evening and was later arrested on a charge of assault with a razor and carrying concealed deadly weapons.

Waters, it is said, heard some one remark that he ought to be "hit in the eye" and, pulling out a razor, exhibited it to Edgar Shealer, drawing it across his own throat and telling the boy that he would do the same to any man who struck him. Mervin Shealer came along about this time and the affair was closed until Officer Emmons was summoned.

The policeman went into the Globe Hotel to get the offender but Proprietor Slagle would not give him up without a warrant. Waters made as if to take something from his pocket and Officer Emmons at once pulled a revolver on him. Sheriff Thompson came in also and later Constable Shealer appeared and took the man before Squire Harnish where he served a warrant.

This morning a hearing was held at the same place and Waters was held for Court.

CARRIERS FOR SMALLER TOWNS

Postmaster General Hitchcock Tuesday made an announcement which will be of keen interest to the third class post offices in Adams county. This announcement is that he is preparing to establish an experiment carrier service in towns of the second and third classes not now entitled to free delivery service.

Congress has appropriated $100,000 to enable postmasters to employ the necessary assistance to deliver the mail in such communities, the amount to be spent at anyone office not to exceed $1800 a year. The postmaster general is authorized to prescribe the regulations.

"It is understood that several offices will be selected in each state for the experiment and if it works well it will be extended to all second and third class offices. The delivery of mail by letter carriers is now confined by law to cities having a population of 10,000 or more, or which have annual receipts of at least $10,000.

SICKLES' SON AGAINST HIM

The direct charge that Gen. Daniel E. Sickles his father, asked his mother from whom he was separated by a quarrel of long ago, to pawn her jewels to save from creditors his collection of war relics and that the old General then refused to see his mother or consider a reconciliation, was made by Stanton Sickles, son of the aged veteran.

Stanton Sickles said that the sacrifice made by his mother was because she hoped to effect a reconciliation but the old General stubbornly declined to meet her advances. He said that now the only chance of getting his parents together rests with the father, he and the mother are through.

KILLED IN FALL FROM BRIDGE

Fatal Accident Near Porters in which Workman Fell from Bridge and was Badly Hurt. Died Five Hours Later.

Maurice Schulman, boss carpenter of the Claiborne-Johnson Company, of Baltimore, was killed Wednesday by a fall from the bridge which the Western Maryland railroad company is constructing over Oil Creek, between Porters and Valley Junction. Falling a distance of seven feet, Schulman's head struck a concrete wall crushing his skull. He died five hours after the accident, which occurred at 7.45 a. m. Besides the fracture of the skull he suffered concussion of the brain.

At the time of the accident Mr. Schulman was directing the work of a gang from the bridge. In turning around to give a direction over the side of the bridge to a man standing below he stumbled over the rail and, losing his balance, pitched head foremost over the side. Directly beneath him was the concrete work, to which he fell. The crack of his skull was plainly heard by the workmen.

When picked up by the men, he was conscious. He was removed to one of the shacks nearby, where are used by the men employed on the bridge, and Dr. L. H. Sterner, of Porters, was summoned and attended him. Two hours after the accident Schulman lost consciousness and had not regained it before his death occurred at 1.15 p. m.

He leaves a wife and three children. His family in Baltimore, was notified by officials of the Western Maryland Railroad Company. The body was taken to Hanover by an undertaker and was prepared for burial and was taken to Baltimore this morning.

CONSTABLES ARE GAME WARDENS

"If people who are complaining about violations of the state game laws would only turn to local constables, who are ex-officio game wardens, there would be fewer breaches of the law," said Dr. Joseph Kalbfus, secretary of the State Game Commission, in discussing the usual ante-season reports of illegal shooting.

"The woods are full of game because this has been an excellent breeding season and I think that in some sections of the state the preserves have contributed to the supply," said the secretary.

"Whenever there is lots of game there are many reports of illegal shooting. But what can the state do with less than a score of wardens? Sportsmen can help the supply of game by reporting violations to constables and seeing that offenders are punished."

The blackbird season is now on, and on October 1 the woodcock season opens; the Hungarian quail season starting on October 15.

JUST T. R. MEN FROM U.P. RANKS
Three Are Expelled and Three Resign.

Republican National Committee Declares New Jersey, West Virginia and North Carolina Seats Vacant.

New York, Sept. 19.—The Republican national committee accepted the resignations of its members from Minnesota, Oklahoma and Ohio and declared vacant the seats held by members from New Jersey, West Virginia and North Carolina, who are Roosevelt supporters.

Successors were named to retiring members from Oklahoma, Ohio, New Jersey and North Carolina.

The committee refused to recognize a telegram from Russ Avery, of California, announcing his resignation and voted to expel him for "disloyalty to the Republican party."

Mr. Hilles, as chairman, was empowered to appoint a sub-committee of three to recommend a successor to Mr. Avery.

This action was taken, it was explained, because a majority of the state committeemen of California are supporters of Colonel Roosevelt and the choice of a Republican national committeeman could not be left to them. The sub-committee, Mr. Hilles announced, would confer with Republican leaders in California concerning both Mr. Avery's successor and the situation in that state. The sub-committee will report back to Mr. Hilles its findings.

In the cases of William Edwards, of West Virginia, whose seat was declared vacant, and I. A. Casewell, of Minnesota, who resigned, the committee voted to ask the state committees of West Virginia and Minnesota, respectively, to recommend their successors. Mr. Edwards' seat was declared vacant because of his "disloyalty to the Republican party."

Franklin Murphy, former committeeman from New Jersey, was elected to fill the vacancy from that state created by declaring Borden Whiting no longer a member of the committee.

E. C. Duncan was elected to succeed Richmond Pearson, of North Carolina. Sherman Graner was elected to succeed Walter F. Brown, the retiring member from Ohio, and J. A. Harris was elected successor to C. C. Priestley, of Oklahoma.

After disposing of these cases the committee took up the situation in California.

The following sub-committee was appointed by Mr. Hilles to consider the situation in California: Samuel A. Perkins, Washington; Ralph Williams, Oregon, and Representative Ralph W. Cameron, of Arizona, all members of the national committee.

Forty states were represented by committeemen or their proxies when the committee convened. One of the absent members, Thomas A. Marlow, of Montana, was represented by Gus Karger.

No doubt was expressed prior to the meeting that the committee would take the action indicated in each case. Although the name of Henry G. Wasson, committeeman from Pennsylvania, was not in the list of undesirable, there was talk that an effort would be made to expel him by some of the staunch organization members. Mr. Wasson was not present personally. He is a Roosevelt man, but Mr. Hilles is desirous of avoiding action against him because of Mr. Wasson's agreeing to withdraw the Roosevelt electors in his state and replace them with Taft men.

MAN-EATING TIGER LOOSE ON SHIP
 Wounded, He Leaps Into Sea and Trainer Follows.

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—How a man-eating Bengal tiger terrorized a ship's crew in midocean and a devoted crewmate tried to commit suicide when the beast, having finally been wounded, jumped overboard, was told by Captain Gheslert, of the British steamship Koranna. The vessel sailed from Calcutta two months ago.

Just before the ship left the Indian city a large tiger was taken aboard, to be trained enroute and sold in this country. The animal was placed in a heavy cage on the forward deck and attracted much attention from the crew.

Abdul Hamid Haresch, one of the ship's firemen, became much attached to the beast. He made it his duty to feed the tiger and spent all his leisure before the animal's cage, petting it and talking to it in a jumble of Indian words.

On the night of Aug. 8 in the Indian ocean the ship encountered a terrific storm. The sea was running high and the vessel tossed and rolled like a chip. The rubbing of the cage against the ship's cabin finally loosened the door. It swung open and the man-eater stepped onto the deck.

Chief Officer Smith was on watch. He cried for help, the whole crew responding. Flashes of lightning showed the big animal pacing furiously about the deck, growling and growling with fear.

When Smith ordered the tiger killed Haresch objected and tried to reach the animal's side. He was held back by the other sailors, while Smith fired as a flash of lightning showed the animal ready to plunge into the group surrounding him. The bullet missed a vital spot, but tore a great hole in the beast's side. Stunned for a moment, the tiger paused and then with a roar leaped overboard. Haresch followed the tiger, and was rescued with difficulty.

TWO AMERICANS SLAIN IN MEXICO
Marauding Rebels Held Responsible For Murders.
FEDERAL TROOPS RESTLESS

Many Rumors of Disloyalty to Madero Government Among Officers and Men in the North.

Washington, Sept. 19.—Murders of two Americans in Mexico were reported to the state department.

George Retterman, an American blacksmith, who formerly lived at Wichita, Kan., is reported to have been murdered at Cusuhurichio on the night of Sept. 15. No particulars of this murder are yet known.

The other murder reported is that of Jacob Meyer, also an American, whose headless body was found by some of his neighbors at San Pedro Maran.

The body, with the head cut off, was found in the house Meyer occupied, and it was evident, the reports state, that he had been dead many days. When the murder was committed, by whom or under what circumstances it is not known, but it is presumed that members of the marauding rebel bands are responsible. The local Mexican authorities in Mexico have promised to make a thorough investigation.

While no official statement has been given out regarding the number of Americans killed in Mexico during the present revolution, it is understood that it is very considerable.

Rumors of disloyalty to the Madero government existing among officers and men of the federal army of the north continue to reach the state department from all sources. While nothing has yet happened which absolutely confirms the rumors, there is still much reason to believe that there is a good deal of truth in them.

Depredations upon the property of Americans continue without any sign of abatement. The Batopila Mining company has reported that the town of Batopila has been captured by the rebels, who are demanding $7500 from the company under threat of looting and destruction to its property.

General Steever reported that he had sent Pascual Orozco, Sr., father of the rebel commander, and four officers of Orozco's staff to Marfa, Tex. Mexico has made no request for the extradition of Orozco, Sr., and the captive members of Orozco's staff, nor is it expected that such a request will be made. The men will be held indefinitely, however, by the United States forces.

Arming Mexican Cadets.
 Mexico City, Mex., Sept. 19.—Cadets of the Tlapan Military school were armed to aid in resisting a possible attack on the capital by General Zapata following his capture of Ajusco, eighteen miles distant. It is believed the thirty rurales who were guarding the place were killed.

TELLS OF NEW RACE
 Stefansson Says Some of Them Wear Red Beards.

New York, Sept. 19.—Dr. Vilhjalm Stefansson, ethnologist, anthropologist and explorer, who found a new race of men in blond Eskimos, some of whom were red bearded, in what the maps declare to be "uninhabited territory" in the Coronation gulf region of Victoria island, British Columbia, returned after four years' absence.

Dr. Stefansson was possibly more interested in the curious blond people whom he lived with and studied for several months than almost any other of his finds, but the museum heads believe that his most valuable discoveries dealt with the pottery art in the Arctic regions.

In the past it was believed that only the Eskimos in Alaska knew anything about the use of pottery for cooking and other purposes, but Dr. Stefansson found specimens throughout the entire section over which he traveled, even in the land of the strange blond people, although they were not given to the use of it. Some of the weird looking pots and things that he dug up are very old and may have seen service long before the days of the oldest of the Eskimos' forefathers.

NOVEL USE FOR MUSIC
MAY BE MADE TO EXTINGUISH FIRE IS CLAIM.

San Francisco Man Makes the Assertion, and Bases It on Vibration Theory—Scientists, Unconvinced, Listen With Respect.

When Charles Kellogg of San Francisco announced that he could sing a fire out there was scoffing from the unbelievers. They had heard of this man before, and knew he could imitate any bird he admired in the wood-land; that he had been able to produce wonderful pictures of wild animals through the Sierra Mountains, because he made them completely unafraid by his singing; they knew that serpents had absolutely no terrors for him. But a fire, they argued, "has no life, no mind, therefore it cannot be hypnotized, tamed or lulled."

Nevertheless, fires are being "sung out" under test conditions.

Fire, says Mr. Kellogg, who denies all wizardry, is vibration; and just as it has been shown in the laboratory that one vibration may annihilate, control, silence another, so the proper one will still the vibration of fire, and, when the vibration is still, the fire is out.

Mr. Kellogg makes no claim that any human voice can sing to quiesce the vibrations of a conflagration. The extinguishing vibrations must be of volume commensurate with those to be controlled, but he does maintain that the fire-fighting operation in the future will be based upon these principles.

According to this theory, one may live to see giant tuning forks or musical instruments taking the place of the fire engines.

Kellogg was born in the California mountains, where he grew up in close touch with nature. His ability to reproduce musically all sounds of mother earth is phenomenal.

Make a few simple little experiments in vibration on your own account. Hold an empty cigar in your hands in the room where someone is playing the piano, and every now and then you will feel that box vibrate. Try singing in a room where there are several small stringed instruments and you will be pleased sometimes to hear a string sing with you.

The soothing, healing power of music in treating the insane has called forth remarks lately. Will the physician of the future take temperatures with a tuning fork and prescribe harmonious chords to allay fever or a "concord of sweet sounds" to hasten the knitting of bones?

Woman the Impersonal.
 Woman is not a personality. She is a symbol. This is by no means assigned to her an inferior place. Far from it. To regard woman as an inferior, man is foolish, and as long as the woman movement, working on that basis, tries to prove that she is an equal or superior man, it must break down. As long as scientists and scholars insist on treating the points where woman differs from man as inferiorities, so long will their work remain useless. Equally foolish is the discussion of which is the more highly organized. Both are superior; both complete. They are merely different.

Woman has a different nature, a different purpose; and the self-centered feeling of personality is impossible to her. She is God-centered, a symbol of divine nature, a power working through man to accomplish what she will. She is to men the vision of creativeness, and this vision it is their part to make reality. One has only to look at the curious results of woman's interpretation of the word personality, and her application of it to herself as a "right," to see how ill this man-quality fits her. When woman starts out with a baleful determination to "live her own life," it makes one weep or laugh, according to one's temperament. Woman's strength and power lie not in a pseudo-personality, but in her nearness to divine nature.—Atlantic Monthly.

Some days ago, remarks the Cri d Paris, the emperor, after having waited for him until half past 6 o'clock, decided to go and surprise his chancellor in Frederick street. He found him in the bath. This Father Refused to Let His Daughter Die.

Here is a story with a moral that many parents might take to heart:

"My daughter was very pale, nervous, thin, and suffered with severe pain in her back, so that we took her out of school. Her flesh became bony and she could not retain her urine. I spent over $100 for medicines, but she grew worse. Finally I bought a bottle of Thompson's Barosma and she began to grow better right away. Five bottles of Thompson's Barosma made a complete cure, and today she is a perfectly healthy girl. Thompson's Barosma saved her life, for she was failing so fast that death was not far off."—Frank D. Meeder, Pleasantville, Pa.

CHAFIN TERMS T. R. A HUMBUC

Says He Protects Trusts and Is Reactionary.

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 19.—In his speech here Eugene W. Chafin, prohibition candidate for president, said he had heard reports that he "had gone over to Roosevelt." In reply he said:

"That is not true. I am a real progressive, not a humbug, trying to paddle into office on a ramshackle raft constructed of good planks, bad planks and beer kegs. Mr. Roosevelt, standing for some good things, is standing for some bad things. He is likewise standing for a whole lot of things; the ordinary man does not suspect at all. Any one who knows his record of trust protection, campaign scandals, high tariff and reactionary leadership will not be fooled by his sudden out of office conversion to sundry popular measures."

"His position on the whisky question is plain. At Chicago, when he was 'professing his faith' and inviting questions, someone asked him how he stood on the liquor issue. He fired up at once and said, 'Oh, go to —,' and then came a pause. Any one who has ever watched a man try to start a balky mule knows what the finishing word would have been. But he thought better of it and lamely concluded, 'Oh, go to a primary school.'"

RACE TRACK PEOPLE DEFIANT

Commission Associated With Havre de Grace Track.

REPEAL OF LAW IS URGED

Racing Commission Will Not Try to Curtail Gambling, Despite Grand Jury Report.

Bel Air, Md., Sept. 19.—The racing commission of Harford county, which has supervision of the racing now being conducted on the new Havre de Grace track, will not try to curtail the gambling at that resort, notwithstanding the urgent report made by the grand jury that steps be taken to stop the "sport."

Most of the members of the commission are closely associated with the Harford Agricultural and Breeders' association, by which the track is operated, and at least one of these openly defied the grand jury, the newspapers and that portion of the public sentiment which believes that the track should be closed.

This was Michael H. Fahey, who was reading clerk in the state senate at the last legislative session, when the bill under which the race track promoters are operating, was slipped through the assembly.

"I stand just where I have always stood," said Fahey, "and I don't care a rap for the newspapers."

"How about the grand jury's report?" he was asked.

"I don't know. I'm not afraid of anything or anybody," he replied.

Fahey is the ruling power in the commission, just as he was the dominant influence in organizing the race track enterprise. He is actively associated with the licensed racing outfit, and held a long conference with Stevenson A. Williams, attorney for that crowd, which was of the most friendly nature.

L. J. Williams, another commissioner, is the son of the counsel and clerk. James T. Jones, chairman of the commission, lives at Berkeley, and is the clerk to State Senator Andrew, who is said to have a stock interest in the Havre de Grace track.

Dr. L. H. Tubbs, of Havre de Grace, is another commissioner, and he spends most of his time during the meet at the track, on closest of terms with the promoters. J. Alexis Shriver is president of the Bel Air fair, in the interest of which he originally boosted racing legislation, and as a commissioner he is not going to do anything to cut into benefits, although the Bel Air project gets nothing from the racing bill.

County Judge Harlan, to whom the grand jury made its report, declined to discuss the situation.

"No application for mandamus has been made to me," he said.

"Have you any comment on the grand jury's report?"

"None whatever; not a word."

It is an open secret in Bel Air that Judge Harlan is closely in accord with the best thought, and that if he had the power he would probably act for the suppression of what the grand jury called a "dirty collar on a clean shirt," "a gambling institution of the most dangerous kind," run by professional gamblers of other states behind the respectable front of citizens of Maryland.

"From all the evidence before the grand jury," said Foreman Jacob S. Baer, "I don't believe this association had any books or secretary or anything else. It appears to be run in the loosest kind of manner, and the grand jury had reason to believe that Robert M. Vandiver got out of the jurisdiction to evade service. In fact, the officials we had before us did not seem to know much about the enterprise, for they are all straw men."

In its report the grand jury demanded that if the law officers are unable to give relief, the first act of the next legislature be a repeal of the racing law. Some citizens are even urging that the governor call an extra session of the state lawmakers to handle the situation, but this step is considered unlikely.

EXTEND MARTIAL LAW IN WEST VIRGINIA

State Troops Cover the Strike Territory.

Charleston, W. Va., Sept. 19.—The martial law zone in the strike country was extended to include Fayette county, where disturbances have been reported among striking miners since early in the week.

Among the towns included in the extension are Keefertown, Kingston, Mahan and a number of less important mining camps. The territory embraces about twenty square miles.

Soon after the boundaries of the new zone were announced two companies of infantry, commanded by Captain Chambers and Captain Jackson, captured fifteen mine guards. It had been denied that mine guards were on duty in this section. They were started on the way to military headquarters, where they will be put on trial.

Interest centered in a telegram received by President Thomas Cairns, of district No. 17, United Mine Workers, from International President John P. White, that he and other international officers would arrive in Charleston in time for the meeting called by Governor Glasscock of miners, coal operators and commercial bodies for next Saturday morning.

BOY LOSES BOTH LEGS

Run Down at a Railroad Crossing in Trenton.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 19.—With both legs off, Francis Smith, seventeen years old, is in a precarious condition in St. Francis' hospital here. The youth was crossing the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad when he was struck by a freight train. Several cars passed over his legs, completely severing them.

In spite of his injuries, Smith retained consciousness, and when the ambulance arrived to take him to the hospital he was able to give his name and residence. The lad was employed as a messenger boy by the Western Union Telegraph company in its office in Trenton.

Jumps Fourteen Stories.

Chicago, Sept. 19.—Prevented from jumping to his death in the interior of the Masonic Temple building by wire nets, C. R. Rasmussen climbed to the roof of the twenty-two-story structure and jumped off. His body crashed on the roof of an adjoining building, fourteen stories below, with such force that the plaster was knocked from ceilings within the structure.

Priest Killed in Elevator.

Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 19.—Rev. Father T. J. Duffy, aged seventy-two years, for eighteen years rector of St. John's Roman Catholic church at Wellsburg, W. Va., was crushed to death in the North Wheeling hospital as he entered an elevator.

THE TERROR IN THE SNOW

Hendry, my servant, saw to it that I should not forget Inspector Addington Peace. Shortly after the adventure which I have already narrated, I left London for a round of country visits. And if a paragraph concerning that eminent detective chanced to appear in a newspaper, the substance of it was brought to me with my shaving-water in the morning.

"I see 'e 'as bin up to 'is games again, sir," was Hendry's usual overture. "My word, but 'e's a sly one, by all accounts," was the customary conclusion.

I believe that Hendry often gained considerable notoriety in the servants' hall by a boasted friendship with Peace. To this I attribute the fact of his being consulted by Mr. Heavittree's butler on the occasion of the burglary that took place while I was staying at Crandon. Hendry's ludicrous flacco, which nearly resulted in a law-suit for false imprisonment, need not be narrated here, though it was considered a remarkably good joke against me at the time.

Towards the end of December I returned to London for a few days, and on the third night after my arrival I decided to visit the Inspector. Hendry had discovered that he was a bachelor, and lived in two little rooms on the third floor. The floors that separated us were let out as offices, so that Peace at the top and I at the bottom had the old house to ourselves after seven o'clock.

The little man was at home, and seemed pleased to see me. With his sparrow-like agility he hopped about, producing glasses and a bottle of whisky. Finally, with our pipes in full blast, we sat facing each other across the fire, and soon dropped into a conversation which to me, at least, was of unusual interest. A very curious knowledge of London and its peoples had Inspector Addington Peace.

An hour quickly slipped by, and when I rose to go I asked him if he would dine with me on my return from Cloudham in Norfolk, where I was spending Christmas. He would be pleased, he told me; and then, as he stooped to light a spill in the coals—

"You stay with Baron Steen, I suppose?" he asked.

"Yes."

"And why?"

"Why?" I echoed in some surprise.

"You have relatives or other friends?"

"My nearest relative is a sour old uncle in Bradford, who calls me hard names for using the gifts Providence gave me instead of adding up figures in a smoky office. As for friends—well, I am a fairly rich man, Inspector."

it?"

"And this is London society?" I exclaimed. "No, man; no. It's the Smart Set, that advertised, criticized, glorious, needy brigade of rogues and vagabonds—the Smart Set. Bless 'em all, say I; they're the best of company, but it's as well to look up your valuables before you become too intimate with them."

I finished off my tea while old Talman sucked at his cigarette in great entertainment.

"You'd like to see the house," he commenced again. "Come along, I'll show you round—I want a walk before dinner."

It was a most interesting ramble. We passed from room to room admiring the carved oak, the splendid pictures, the Sheraton furniture, the cabinets of old china, the armour, and the tapestry. For the manor was filled with the heirlooms of the de Launes, from whom Baron Steen rented it. And though the present peer, a broken-down old drunkard, was living in a little villa at Eastbourne on eight hundred pounds a year, the family had been a great and glorious one, finding mention on many a page in English history.

At the end of the great dining-room, set in the black-oak wainscot above the fire, was the portrait of a boy. It was a Reynolds, and a worthy effort of that master hand. The lad could have been no more than fifteen years of age, but in his eyes was that grave, distracted expression that usually comes with the painful wisdom of later years. In more closely examining the picture, I noticed that a large portion of it at the bottom right-hand corner had been repainted or painted out. I called Talman's attention to this misfortune, asking if he knew the cause.

"They painted out the wolf," he said, "and with good enough reason, too."

"A wolf?" I said.

"If old de Laune were to hear me gossiping about it he'd kick me out of the place—he would, by Jove! But with Steen in possession it's safe enough. Mind you, though, you mustn't mention it to the ladies—on your word, now."

"Yes, yes," I said eagerly; "go on."

"Such things frighten the women," he explained. "Well, it was in this way. Philipp, and he was the sixth earl, was our ambassador at St. Petersburg somewhere about the year 1790. Once when he was out hunting he shot an old she-wolf that was peering from the mouth of a cave, and inside they found a thriving family of four cubs. One of them was white, an albino, I suspect. He saved it from the dogs and took it home. When he came back to Cloudham the next year, he brought it along with his wife and his boy—an only son. They say it was a great pet at first, but it grew sulky with age, and finally was kept chained in the stables."

"One Christmas eve, just as dusk was closing in, de Laune was trotting down the drive—he had been hunting at a distant meeting—when he heard a fearful screaming from the lower gardens towards the cliff. He put spurs to his horse, and in two minutes was galloping through the shadows of the fir avenue towards the sea. All of a sudden his horse pulled up dead, threw him, and bolted. When he got to his feet—he wasn't hurt, luckily—what did he see but the body of his son, lying with his throat torn out, and the white wolf standing over him, the broken chain dangling at its neck."

"They say he was a giant, this Philipp de Laune, and of a very wild and passionate temper. Anyway, he went straight for the beast, and, though he was dreadfully mauled, he killed it—Heaven knows how—with his bare hands. That's why the present branch of the family came by the place. Pretty gruesome, isn't it?"

"A strange story," I told him; "but why must it be kept a secret from the ladies?"

"Because the beast walks, man. There's not a laborer in Norfolk who would go into the lower gardens on any night of the year, much less on Christmas eve."

"My good Talman, do you mean to say you believe this?"

"I don't know—but I wouldn't go into the lower gardens tonight, if I could walk round. Think of it, Philipp, the white shape with the bloody jaws lurking in the shadows! Ugh—let's go and get a cocktail before—"

"I beg your pardon, sir, but the baron is looking for you."

He was a tall, hatchet-faced fellow, with that mixture of respect and dignity that marks the well-trained British manservant. Upon the soft pile of the rugs we had not heard his footsteps.

"He asked me to find you, sir," he continued, addressing himself to me with a slight bow. "He is waiting in his room."

As he preceded us thither, Talman whispered that Henderson—meaning thereby our conductor—was Steen's valet, and a very clever fellow by all accounts.

The baron, fat, high-colored and hearty, welcomed me with an open sincerity of pleasure well calculated to place a guest at his ease. A remarkable old boy was Baron Steen. He always seemed to carry with him a jovial atmosphere of his own, in which those to whom he spoke were lost and blinded out of their better judgment. He was kind enough to pay me some compliments upon my water-color work. Whatever else can be brought against him, no one can deny that he was a sound judge of art.

The dinner passed pleasantly enough that night, with free and witty conversation. Our bachelor host was in his most humorous mood, keeping those about him in shouts of laughter. Facing him, at the extremity of the long table, was his secretary, a thin, melancholy youth of about four-and-twenty. My fair neighbor told me that Terry, as he was named, had been intended for the church, but that his father, having ruined himself on the stock exchange, had persuaded the baron to give him work. He was devoted to his patron, which, she smiled, was not surprising, seeing that he must be well on his way to rebuilding the fortune his father had lost.

I am not an ardent gambler, and when I do play I admit a preference for games in which brains are of some account. The roulette table soon bored me, and after I had seen the last of a few pounds, I contented myself by watching the changing fortunes of the rest of the party. Just before eleven the baron, who had parted with considerable sums of money in perfect good humor, excused himself, and before the rest had settled down to the table again, I slipped away to my bedroom, where a selection of novels and a favorite pipe offered more congenial attractions.

The room was of considerable size and majestically furnished. It was on the first floor at the extremity of the right-hand wing, and looked out over the gardens on the cliff. A branch road from the main drive ran beneath the windows to an entrance at the back of the house.

They had steam heat on the upper floors, and the high temperature of my room had drawn stale and heavy odors from the tapestry on the walls and the ancient hangings that fringed the huge four-post bedstead. It was the atmosphere of an old clothes shop on a July day. I pulled back the curtains, opened the window and thrust out my head for a mouthful of fresh air.

It was a quiet, moonless night. lit by the stars that blinked in their thousand constellations. Though the snow lay deep, the air struck mildly. Indeed, if it were freezing, it could not have been by more than two degrees. Upon the edge of the distant cliffs robes of confusing mist curled in veils as thin as moonlight; but in the foreground the yew walks and aisles of ancient laurel showed clearly upon the white carpet. About the central avenue of firs which carved the gardens into the darkness lay impenetrable pools of shadow. As I waited, the silence was startled by a bell. It rang the four quarters in a tinkling measure, followed by eleven musical strokes. I knew that the sound must come from the little church that lay to my right; but, though I leaned from my window, the angle of the wing in which I was, hid the building from me.

I feel that the story which I have now to tell may well turn me into an object for ridicule. I can only describe that which I saw; as for the conclusions at which I arrived there are many more practical people in the world than myself who would have judged no differently. At best it was a ghastly business.

I had returned to the dressing-table and was changing my dress-coat for a comfortable smoking-jacket when I heard it—a faint and distant cry, yet a cry which was crowded with such terror that I clung to a chair with my white face and goggling eyes staring back at me from the mirror on the table. Again it sounded, and again; then silence fell like the shutter of a camera. I rushed to the window, peering out into the night.

The great gardens lay sleeping in the dusky shadows. There was nothing to be heard; nothing moved save the curling wreaths of mist that came creeping up over the cliffs like the ghosts of drowned sailormen from their burial sands below. Could it have been some trick of the imagination which I despised thrust itself upon me—could it bear reference to that grim tragedy that had been played in the old fir avenue so many years ago?

And then I first saw the thing that came towards me. It was moving up a narrow path, hedged with yew, that led from the gardens and passed to the right of the wing in which I stood. The yew had been clipped into walls some five feet high, but the eastern gales had beaten out gaps and ragged indentations in the lines of greenery, so that in my sideways view of it the path itself was here and there exposed. It was through one of these breaches in the walls that I noticed a sign of movement. I waited, straining my eyes. Yes, there it showed again, a something, moving swiftly towards the house with a clumsy rolling stride.

It was never nearer to me than fifty yards, and the stars gave a shifty light. Yet it left me with an impression that it was about four feet in height and of a dull white color. I remember that its body contrasted plainly with the dark hedges, but melted into uncertainty against a patch of snow. Once it stopped and half raised itself on its hind legs as if listening. Then again it tumbled forward in its shambling, ungainly fashion—now hidden by the yew wall, now thrust into momentary sight by a ragged gap until it disappeared round the angle of the house. Doubtless it would turn to the left, round the old chapel, across the snow-bound park, and so to the woods—where a wolf should be!

I was still staring from the window in the blank fear of the unknown, when I heard the swift tap of feet upon the road beneath me. Round the corner of the wing came a man, running with a pater of little strides, while a dozen yards behind him were a pair of less active followers. What they wanted I did not consider; for at that moment the sight of my own kind was joy enough for me. The electric lamps in the room behind me threw a broad golden patch upon the snow, and as the leader reached it he stopped, glancing up at where I stood. The light struck him fairly in the face. It was Addington Peace!

"Did you hear that cry?" he panted; and then, with a sudden nod of recognition: "I see who it is, Mr. Phillips—well, and did you hear it?"

"It came from over there—in the fir avenue," said I, pointing with a trembling finger. "I don't understand it, Inspector; I don't indeed. There was something that came up that yew walk behind you about a minute afterwards. I should have thought it would have passed you."

"No, I saw nothing. What was it like?"

I had returned to the dressing-table and was changing my dress-coat for a comfortable smoking-jacket when I heard it—a faint and distant cry, yet a cry which was crowded with such terror that I clung to a chair with my white face and goggling eyes staring back at me from the mirror on the table. Again it sounded, and again; then silence fell like the shutter of a camera. I rushed to the window, peering out into the night.

The great gardens lay sleeping in the dusky shadows. There was nothing to be heard; nothing moved save the curling wreaths of mist that came creeping up over the cliffs like the ghosts of drowned sailormen from their burial sands below. Could it have been some trick of the imagination which I despised thrust itself upon me—could it bear reference to that grim tragedy that had been played in the old fir avenue so many years ago?

And then I first saw the thing that came towards me. It was moving up a narrow path, hedged with yew, that led from the gardens and passed to the right of the wing in which I stood. The yew had been clipped into walls some five feet high, but the eastern gales had beaten out gaps and ragged indentations in the lines of greenery, so that in my sideways view of it the path itself was here and there exposed. It was through one of these breaches in the walls that I noticed a sign of movement. I waited, straining my eyes. Yes, there it showed again, a something, moving swiftly towards the house with a clumsy rolling stride.

It was never nearer to me than fifty yards, and the stars gave a shifty light. Yet it left me with an impression that it was about four feet in height and of a dull white color. I remember that its body contrasted plainly with the dark hedges, but melted into uncertainty against a patch of snow. Once it stopped and half raised itself on its hind legs as if listening. Then again it tumbled forward in its shambling, ungainly fashion—now hidden by the yew wall, now thrust into momentary sight by a ragged gap until it disappeared round the angle of the house. Doubtless it would turn to the left, round the old chapel, across the snow-bound park, and so to the woods—where a wolf should be!

I was still staring from the window in the blank fear of the unknown, when I heard the swift tap of feet upon the road beneath me. Round the corner of the wing came a man, running with a pater of little strides, while a dozen yards behind him were a pair of less active followers. What they wanted I did not consider; for at that moment the sight of my own kind was joy enough for me. The electric lamps in the room behind me threw a broad golden patch upon the snow, and as the leader reached it he stopped, glancing up at where I stood. The light struck him fairly in the face. It was Addington Peace!

"Did you hear that cry?" he panted; and then, with a sudden nod of recognition: "I see who it is, Mr. Phillips—well, and did you hear it?"

"It came from over there—in the fir avenue," said I, pointing with a trembling finger. "I don't understand it, Inspector; I don't indeed. There was something that came up that yew walk behind you about a minute afterwards. I should have thought it would have passed you."

"No, I saw nothing. What was it like?"
